

Karl Sandstrom Featured in Law360—How One Law Student's Political Passion Became a Career

Senior Counsel Karl Sandstrom was featured in "How One Law Student's Political Passion Became a Career," an article in Law360,* regarding his lifelong passion for politics.

Now as the co-founder and chief counsel of the Center for Political Accountability, which has reshaped how corporations view their political spending, Karl recalled that he was enamored with politics and public policy as a kid.

"That's why I went into law. And why I came to Washington, D.C., for law school at George Washington University," Karl told Law360 Pulse in a recent interview. He went on to Georgetown University Law Center for a master's in tax law and has remained in D.C.
