Duties of Trustees in a Shrinking Asset Environment

In August 2019, investments in passive funds surpassed those in traditional actively managed funds for the first time. According to Morningstar, assets in index-tracking US equity funds grew to about $4.27 trillion, compared with almost $4.25 trillion in funds managed by active managers. As investors have increased investments in passive funds, by close to $90 billion year over year through August 2019, active funds have continued to see outflows, to the tune of almost $125 billion in the same period. Trustees of actively managed funds have had a ringside seat to this seismic shift. The shift has presented a new set of challenges to trustees, as they consider reverse economies of scale, fund closures, mergers, and other consequences of the shift from active to passive.
