

A new year is just around the corner, but we cannot close out 2022 without looking back on the events that shaped the world of standard essential patent (SEP) and fair, reasonable, and non-discriminatory (FRAND) licensing.

As with everything, the year involved some give-and-take for both SEP holders and implementers, but the main takeaway is that rights' holders are generally riding tailwinds into 2023, as implementers struggle to balance competing and often pricey licensing demands.

Read the full article on *IAM Media*.

*Subscription-based publication

Authors

Amanda Tessar

Partner

ATessar@perkinscoie.com   303.291.2357

W. Matthew Pierce

Counsel

WPierce@perkinscoie.com   303.291.2369

Explore more in

Intellectual Property Law   Patent Litigation