

Sneak Preview? SEC Chair Weighs in on Possible Cyber Disclosure Rulemaking

Recently, SEC Chair Gary Gensler delivered a speech about cybersecurity and a section of that speech was devoted to what public companies now disclose - and would be disclosing once the SEC ultimately adopts new cyber disclosure rules that it plans to propose in the near term - about their cybersecurity practices and incidents. Here are three themes Chair Gensler highlighted in addressing potential SEC rulemaking for public companies on cybersecurity: 1. Rule proposals may include practices with respect to corporate cybersecurity governance, strategy, and risk management. 2. Cyber risk disclosure should be presented in a consistent, comparable, and decision-useful manner across companies. 3. The SEC Staff is considering whether - and how - to update disclosures to investors when cyber events have occurred.

Explore more in

Corporate Law

Blog series

Public Chatter

Public Chatter provides practical guidance—and the latest developments—to those grappling with public company securities law and corporate governance issues, through content developed from an in-house perspective.

View the blog