

PC Food Litigation Index: Q3 2020

Despite the COVID-19 pandemic and limitations on court operations, food litigation filings continue to exceed numbers seen in prior years. As our Food Litigation colleagues wrote in Law360 (sub. req.), food litigation filings are anticipated to surpass 2019's record numbers by nearly 20%, even though general commercial litigation filings across all industries have decreased significantly. Topically, false-fact, Proposition 65, and vanilla cases continued to dominate new filings in Q3 2020. Plaintiffs alleged in more than 40 new cases that the labels or marketing of a food or beverage misrepresented some aspect of the product. There were at least 15 new Proposition 65 cases this quarter, indicating that Proposition 65 remains a filing hotspot. Courts, especially those in New York, are seeing an increased number of claims related to vanilla.
