

On June 27, 2024, in SEC v. Jarkesy, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the Seventh Amendment entitles a respondent to a Securities and Exchange Commission securities fraud action seeking civil monetary penalties to a jury trial. Although the federal agency at issue in Jarkesy was the SEC, the decision is likely to have significant implications for other agencies that seek to impose civil penalties for fraudulent acts, including the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, whose anti-manipulation rule is modeled after the SEC's own anti-fraud rule.

Click here to read the full Update.

Explore more in

White Collar & Investigations

Blog series

White Collar Briefly

Drawing from breaking news, ever changing government priorities, and significant judicial decisions, this blog from Perkins Coie's White Collar and Investigations group highlights key considerations and offers practical insights aimed to guide corporate stakeholders and counselors through an evolving regulatory environment.

View the blog